

Everyone in tech has an opinion about Soham Parekh

You got into Y Combinator, raised $20 million from a16z, and then exited to Meta? That's cool, I guess. But did Soham Parekh apply to work at your startup?

There is now a new badge of honor for startup founders: your proximity to one previously unknown Indian software engineer named Soham Parekh.

The Anna Delvey of Silicon Valley was outed on Wednesday when former Mixpanel CEO Suhail Doshi posted on X to warn fellow founders about Parekh.

“PSA: there's a guy named Soham Parekh (in India) who works at 3-4 startups at the same time. He's been preying on YC companies and more. Beware,” Doshi wrote. “I fired this guy in his first week and told him to stop lying/scamming people. He hasn't stopped a year later.”

Now, the post has over 20 million views, with founders and investors from across the tech industry weighing in. And before Andy Jassy asks — could this have all been avoided if more companies returned to the office? No, some people are just bad managers.

According to Doshi, at least three founders have reached out to say that they had fired or were currently employing Parekh.

Not a joke. This is happening real time. This is the 3rd DM today about someone firing him.

Hey Suhail, I just saw this

I'm actually employing this guy right now

Thanks for the tweet, someone from our team sent it to me

I have to digest this a bit, but we're

In the age of subreddit communities like r/overemployed, where members talk about how to get away with working multiple remote jobs at once, this revelation isn't all that surprising. What's more interesting is how widely the responses to his actions vary (to be fair, no one ever said that the tech industry was known for its moral fiber).

To some in the tech community, Parekh has the makings of a folk hero, deceiving well-funded startups and sticking it to the man. To others, he's an immoral liar who screwed over startups and took jobs away from people who actually would have given their all. Many are impressed by how he managed to get through so many notoriously competitive interview processes, while others think he should parlay his 15 minutes of fame into founding his own startup.

"If Soham immediately comes clean and says he was working to train an AI agent for knowledge work, he raises at $100M pre by the weekend," Box CEO Aaron Levie wrote on X.

Chris Bakke — the founder of Laskie, a job-matching platform acquired by X — thinks that Soham should embrace his reputation.

"Soham Parekh needs to start an interview prep company. He's clearly one of the greatest interviewers of all time," Bakke wrote. "He should publicly acknowledge that he did something bad and course correct to the thing he's top 1% at."

He's clearly one of the greatest interviewers of all time.

Easy couple million per year and less stressful than the scam he was running by working at 14 YC companies at a time and getting fired by all of them after 3 weeks. Show more

Meanwhile, Y Combinator CEO Garry Tan took the opportunity to pat himself on the back.

“Without the YC community this guy would still be operating and would have maybe never been caught,” Tan wrote. “The startup guild of YC is a necessary invention to help founders be more successful than they would be alone.”

Why did he do it? Parekh says that this wasn't part of some grand plan — he claims he had no plan at all, and he was trying to make a lot of money very quickly to get himself out of a bad financial situation.

“I really did not think this through,” Parekh said in a live interview with TBNP. “It was an action that was done more out of desperation.”

Parekh did not address Doshi's allegation that the bulk of his resume was fake.

“What’s also funny is, you know, some of the memes,” he said. “I’m very new to Twitter. I joined Twitter yesterday, so this was a lesson for me in social media in general.” (Twitter has long been known as X, of course.)

You don’t have to hand it to him, but he’s a pretty good poster for someone who’s been on the platform for a day. One of his few posts was a response to LinkedIn co-founder Reid Hoffman, who asked what people think Parekh’s LinkedIn header would be.

“I don’t have a LinkedIn,” Parekh replied.

For what it’s worth, his X header is on the money, even if he won’t bother with LinkedIn. It’s the meme of Flynn Rider from the Disney movie “Tangled” — a smug-looking guy about to state a controversial opinion, surrounded by knives on all sides.
