Geographical distribution

A staggering 2,459 of London's high-growth companies (20%) are currently based within the eight square miles of Westminster. A further 1,416 are headquartered in Camden and 1,353 in the City of London.

It will be interesting to see how this landscape evolves in the future, as fully-remote and hybrid working models become increasingly common. Early-stage startups, in particular, may no longer deem Central London office space (and the sky-high rent that comes with it) as essential to their growth plans.

Indeed, the North East London borough of Redbridge has seen the biggest growth in company numbers since 2021, whilst Tower Hamlets and the City of London have seen the biggest decline.

Hiring status—by stage of evolution

Of the 12,320 ambitious businesses active in London, 35% are known to be actively hiring. This translates to 4,273 high-growth companies currently recruiting.

At the moment, of the London-based companies that are operating in the seed stage, 21% are actively hiring.

Unsurprisingly, given they're more likely to be scaling their operations, later-stage businesses are also more likely to be hiring right now: 46% of venture-stage and 37% of established-stage businesses.

This trend is most pronounced at the growth stage of evolution, however, with 52% of growth-stage companies in London actively hiring right now.
