indicate a downward trajectory for 2024, but it is similar to the amount invested in Q1 2023 (£2.34b).

Time will tell whether investment volume will increase in Q2 2024 as it did in 2023; throughout the eight years we've been tracking this data, we've frequently seen Q1 as the lowest quarter for investment (aside from a particularly high Q1 2022). This quarter's result is therefore not a sure-fire indicator of a wider downturn in investment.

It may also indicate, as we've seen more and more in our recent analysis, that investors are opting to hold back on investments at this time. And, as we discussed in our yearly version of this report, The Deal 2023, this uncertainty could be attributed to the 50 global elections being held in 2024, and their influence on the global markets.

Regional trends

In Q1 2024, high-growth companies in Scotland participated in 31 fundraising deals, equating to 6.4% of all deals. This corresponds to our findings in Q4 2023, where Scotland secured 31 deals. What's more impressive is the amount secured (£224m), which works out as 9.4% of the amount

Deal sizes

The mean deal size for Q1 2024 was £4.92m, significantly higher than Q1 2023 (£3.89m), but still considerably lower than that in Q4 2023 (£7.78m).

Aside from Q4 2023, we've seen a reasonably consistent mean deal size of around £4-6m since the post-pandemic investment boom, which saw mean deal sizes peak at £10m in Q3 2021. This average size is consistent with those in 2019 and 2020, possibly indicating a return to the previous 'status quo' for deal sizes. However, with the Q4 2023 outlier, it'll become clearer at the end of 2024 if this is the case or if the average amount invested will rise again later in the year.
