

STARTUPS

A top designer was banned from Dribbble.
Now he's building his own competitor.

Dribbble has permanently banned dozens of designers from its platform following a new effort to pivot to a marketplace and chase monetization. This includes one of the platform's most well-known designers, Gleb Kuznetsov, founder of the San Francisco-based design studio Milkinside.

Dribbble deleted his account with its over 210 million followers because he shared his contact information with prospective clients through the platform in violation of its new rules.

Remarked Kuznetsov in a post on X, "I brought 100,000+ monthly users. 15 years of work. 12,000+ shots. All instantly deleted, because a client asked for my email. One warning. No appeal."

Fed up with the changes at the company, which helps product, UX, web, and other digital designers showcase their portfolios and find new clients, Kuznetsov says he's been talking to investors about launching a competitor.

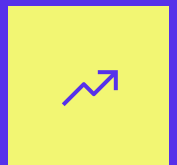

DISRUPT

October 27-29, 2025 | San Francisco

Put your brand in front of 10,000+ tech and VC leaders across all three days of Disrupt 2025. Amplify your reach, spark real connections, and lead the innovation charge. Secure your exhibit space before your competitor does.

Book Your Table >

Most Popular

- Key sections of the US Constitution deleted from government's website
- Instagram takes on Snapchat with new 'Instagram Map'
- Three weeks after acquiring Windsurf, Cognition offers staff the exit door
- Roku launches Howdy, a $2.99 ad-free streaming service
- Spotify raises subscription prices

Gleb Kuznetsov
@glebich · Follow

Totally agree with @jondschubert . I loved @dribbble. I brought 100,000+ monthly users. 15 years of work. 12,000+ shots.

All instantly deleted, because a client asked for my email. One warning. No appeal.

They didn't care about the community. Just their 3% cut.

Dribbble is Show more

 Last edited 8:02 PM · Jul 29, 2025

 1.8K  Reply  Copy link

Read 199 replies

- The uproar over Vogue's AI-generated ad isn't just about fashion
- Your public ChatGPT queries are getting indexed by Google and other search engines

Shortly after his social media post, Dribbble users expressed their shock and anger over the decision, crediting Kuznetsov as being one of their biggest inspirations and lamenting that the platform would make such a misguided move.

Dribbble, meanwhile, says Kuznetsov was actually warned multiple times that he was violating the new rules and the email was the final notice.

Dribbble's pivot to a marketplace

The issue has to do with a more recent policy change first announced on March 17, 2025.

Tech and VC heavyweights join the Disrupt 2025 agenda

Netflix, ElevenLabs, Wayve, Sequoia Capital — just a few of the heavy hitters joining the Disrupt 2025 agenda. They're here to deliver the insights that fuel startup growth and sharpen your edge. Don't miss the 20th anniversary of TechCrunch Disrupt, and a chance to learn from the top voices in tech — grab your ticket now and save up to $675 before prices rise on August 7.

San Francisco | October 27-29, 2025

REGISTER NOW

In an email shared in March with Dribbble's some 750,000 approved designers — meaning those who are authorized to communicate with others on the platform — the company said it was no longer allowing designers to share their contact information with prospective clients until after their client sent payment through its platform.

The company positioned this change as one meant to protect designers from non-payment, as well as one that allows Dribbble to continue to sustain its business.

The announcement was also posted to social media and the company blog.

Hi [User],

We want to inform you of an important change to our Terms of Service.

What's changing?

Starting today, Dribbble designers and clients who meet on Dribbble must keep payments on Dribbble. This means designers are no longer permitted to display or share their contact information (like email addresses, phone numbers, social media handles) prior to client payment on Dribbble. After payment, designers and clients are able to exchange contact information.

Why the change?

Designers can now receive requests, send proposals, deliver work, and get paid, entirely through Dribbble. When clients pay designers through Dribbble, we can protect both parties and mediate any issues that arise during the course of the project. We can also invest more in our product, marketing, and support, which will create more opportunities for designers.

By completing projects on Dribbble, designers:

- Avoid scams and late payment or nonpayment.
- Rank higher in search results and generate more leads.
- Enable us to commit more resources towards feature development and lead generation.

What do I need to do?

If your contact details are displayed on Dribbble, you will receive a separate email with more information (don't worry, we can make the necessary updates on your behalf). If you don't hear from us, you're already in compliance with the new policy.

As always, we are here to help you be successful on Dribbble. If you have questions about the policy, check out our FAQ or reach out to us here.

Thanks for being part of the community.

The Dribbble Team

You received this email because you have a Dribbble account, and this is a required notification of an update to our Terms of Service. This message is essential and sent regardless of your email preferences.

Dribbble Holdings, LTD.
524 Yates St • Victoria CA • V8W 1K8

IMAGE CREDITS:DRIBBBLE

However, Kuznetsov claims that non-payment isn't a very common problem, and really, this update is about Dribbble attempting to take a larger cut of designers' business.

Dribbble doesn't dispute that.

Before the policy change, Dribbble made money in one of two ways. Starting in September 2024, Dribbble began pivoting to a marketplace that connected designers and clients. Designers could communicate freely on the platform and then either share a 3.5% revenue cut on clients they converted, or they could pay for a Pro subscription to skip the rev share. In March, the company tightened the rules further, saying that anyone finding clients on Dribbble would need to offer the platform a cut of their revenue.

“It went from it was optional to use our transactional features to it was required for non-advertisers to use our transactional features, if they were on Dribbble, to find clients,” explains Dribbble CEO Constantine Anastasakis, in an interview with TechCrunch. “If a user is on Dribbble to find inspiration or to get feedback on their work, or to talk shop with their peers, none of this affects them,” he added.

IMAGE CREDITS:DRIBBBLE

The exec, who joined the company after working at direct-to-consumer lender Lower, video marketplace Pond5 (exited to Shutterstock), and freelancer marketplace Fiverr, was hired last April to pivot Dribbble into a marketplace. While the company is profitable under parent company Tiny, it’s still a small 20-person team and isn’t reliant on venture backing to serve its 7.5 to 10 million monthly unique visitors.

“Dribbble was something that really accelerated our business dramatically back in the day,” Kuznetsov told TechCrunch. Before Dribbble, there was no platform where designers could share their work with others, he says. It helped designers receive feedback that came specifically from their peers and allowed newer designers to learn from those at the top of the industry.

Kuznetsov is now part of the latter group.

At Milkinside, Kuznetsov has worked with companies like Apple, Google, Amazon, Scandinavian Airlines, United Airlines, Honda, Mitsubishi, Mercedes-Benz, and other large companies in the Bay Area.

As a result, he likely didn't feel that Dribbble would risk banning him for not abiding by the new terms.

Anastasakis essentially confirmed this to be true.

He told TechCrunch that Kuznetsov received 83 work inquiries since the new terms rolled out in March, and responded to 61. In each message, the site shows a warning that reminds users that contact details should not be shared before project payment. However, Kuznetsov shared his contact information in six messages, which would have displayed a stronger warning at that time.

IMAGE CREDITS:DRIBBBLE

IMAGE CREDITS:DRIBBBLE

The company then followed up with a warning email on July 22 about his repeated terms-of-service violations, which informed him he was risking permanent suspension.

Kuznetsov told us he didn't see this email initially, but Dribbble says it tracked that the email was opened three times before his suspension.

"I believe that Dribbble — it was their goal to hurt me so I can spread that [news] so they can give a harsh lesson to everyone who tries [to break the rules],” Kuznetsov says.

Anastasakis confirmed as much to TechCrunch.

“There’s really no conceivable way in which he did not realize that what he was doing risked permanent suspension of his accounts,” Anastasakis told us.

“I think that ultimately it was that he believed that we wouldn’t take action against a designer of his caliber,” he continued. “As a side note, I actually think that he’s done us a big favor as far as getting the word out about how seriously we take the terms.”

For Kuznetsov, or any designer who was banned for similar reasons, the only option to come back to Dribbble is by joining as an advertiser, which requires a minimum campaign budget of $1,500 per month for at least three months.

A new competitor to Dribbble emerges?

Kuznetsov has decided to forge his own path, saying that he’s hurt by Dribbble’s change.

“It’s not going to be a copycat of Dribbble,” he says of his pending startup. Instead, it will be a resource for designers that will also leverage AI.

While there has been a lot of backlash about AI models training on creatives’ work without compensation, Kuznetsov believes there’s a use case for the technology in terms of inspiration, creation, and design.

IMAGE CREDITS:GLEB KUZNETSOV

“It’s a big hole right now in the market ... Everybody’s doing AI startups, but nobody’s really doing AI startups for designers,” Kuznetsov notes. “AI is something that really can elevate our ability to create, and make it on a much higher level of quality. It’s going to help us to not only earn more money and grow, but also create something we never even thought was possible to create without

- Latest
- Security
- Startups
- AI
- Venture
- Apps
- Apple

- Events
- Podcasts
- Newsletters

our time — how we give our best and give our life to other platforms. Diversification of that investment should be something that everyone should be thinking about,” he adds.

Поставки из России в тенге

База надежных поставщиков. Организуем доставку, оформим СМТ, СТ-1, оплата в тенге!

Открыть >

- f
- X
- in
- reddit
- email
- link

Sarah Perez

Consumer News Editor | X butterfly @ in

Sarah has worked as a reporter for TechCrunch since August 2011. She joined the company after having...

View Bio >

KEEP READING

- f
- X
- in
- reddit
- email
- link

Visually, The Infographics Marketplace, Launches Its New Cloud-Based

Collaborative Project Center

Catherine Shu — 7:07 AM PDT · October 29, 2013

Visually, best known as a marketplace for infographics, has launched its new Marketplace and Project Center to grow the audience for its cloud-based collaborative tools. Customers can now use the marketplace to create videos, presentations, interactive graphics, infographics and other visual content.

The San Francisco-based startup says there are currently 100,000 creative professionals on the platform and that Visually has paid out nearly $2 million in project fees. Visually gives designers a way to reach clients ranging from startups to Fortune 1000 companies. The company says that of the designers that apply to be on Visually, only 10% meet its quality standards.

Founded in 2011 by Stewart Langille and Lee Sherman, the team behind Mint.com's graphics, Visually seeks to change the traditional agency model of content creation. For clients, who have included AOL, Nike, Twitter, NBC, P&G, UNESCO, The Atlantic, Visa, Verizon and Dell, the benefits of using Visually include fixed costs, lower risk, satisfaction guarantees, faster completion rates (sometimes within 24 hours) and access to a wider range of designers. For creative professionals, Visually gives them the chance to work with high profile companies, gain wider exposure for their

Newsletters

See More ↗

Subscribe for the industry's biggest tech news

TechCrunch Daily News

Every weekday and Sunday, you can get the best of TechCrunch's coverage.

Startups Weekly

Startups are the core of TechCrunch, so get our best coverage delivered weekly.

TechCrunch Week in Review

Get the best of our coverage, delivered to your inbox every Saturday.

TechCrunch Mobility

TechCrunch Mobility is your destination for transportation news and insight.

No newsletters selected.

Email address

Subscribe

By submitting your email, you agree to our Terms and Privacy.

work and belong to an online community similar to Dribbble or Forrst.

“Our customers love the experience they get on Visually—the diverse pool of creative talent, the ease of collaboration, and the speed to market. This launch allows us to provide a comprehensive solution for our customers—a one stop shop for all of their visual content,” said Langille in a statement.

Topics: marketplace Startups Visually

- fXint✉🔗

Catherine Shu
Senior Reporter | X 🏠

Catherine Shu covered startups in Asia and breaking news for TechCrunch. Her reporting has also appeared in the...

View Bio >

Loading the next article