

TechCrunch All Stage 2025 welcomes Boldstart partner Ellen Chisa to talk early-stage enterprise bets

We're thrilled to announce that Ellen Chisa, partner at Boldstart Ventures, will be joining us at TechCrunch All Stage 2025 for an energizing conversation about investing in enterprise startups from day one. She's one of the standout voices shaping this year's lineup of founders, funders, and operators gathering July 15 in Boston's SoWa Power Station, and you won't want to miss what she brings to the table.

All Stage is where startup builders get real answers to real questions — from how to raise your next round to how to manage founder burnout. Whether you're scaling your team, fixing your financial model, or just figuring out your next move, All Stage is built to give you the tactical playbook and trusted community you need to grow faster and smarter. Tickets are on sale now.

And we have a special limited-time discount in motion for TechCrunch All Stage, with Founder Passes discounted to $155, and Investor Passes available for $250, with students also getting a chance to attend for just $99. Check out the best option for you and your team right here!

What Ellen's unique expertise brings to TechCrunch All Stage

If you don't already know Ellen Chisa, she's the kind of investor early-stage founders dream of having in their corner.

At Boldstart Ventures, Ellen backs enterprise software companies before most VCs are even paying attention — and she brings deep product and technical empathy to the table. Before joining Boldstart, she co-founded Darklang, a programming language and cloud infrastructure platform built to help developers ship faster. That experience, combined with her product leadership roles at Kickstarter and Lola Travel, makes her uniquely fluent in the realities of building and scaling software from zero to one.

Ellen holds a B.S. in electrical and computer engineering from Olin College and an MBA from Harvard Business School, which adds even more firepower to her founder-first approach. She's as comfortable talking about infrastructure as she is discussing long-term company-building — and that makes her a go-to voice for early-stage founders navigating complex technical bets.

At TechCrunch All Stage, Ellen will share insights on what investors are really looking for in the earliest stages of enterprise software, how founders can position themselves for conviction-level backing, and the common traps to avoid when building in a noisy, fast-changing landscape. Her perspective is especially valuable for first-time founders and technical teams transitioning into startup life.
