Anthropic cuts off OpenAI’s access to its Claude models

Anthropic has revoked OpenAI’s access to its Claude family of AI models, according to a report in Wired.

Sources told Wired that OpenAI was connecting Claude to internal tools that allowed the company to compare Claude’s performance to its own models in categories like coding, writing, and safety.

In a statement provided to TechCrunch, an Anthropic spokesperson said, “OpenAI’s own technical staff were also using our coding tools ahead of the launch of GPT-5,” which is apparently “a direct violation of our terms of service.” (Anthropic’s commercial terms forbid companies from using Claude to build competing services.)

However, the company also said it would continue to give OpenAI access “for the purposes of benchmarking and safety evaluations.”

Meanwhile, in a statement of its own, an OpenAI
