Apple launches $19.99
monthly AppleCare One subscription with coverage for three devices

Care One

Aisha Malik — 5:00 AM PDT · July 23, 2025

Apple announced on Wednesday that it's launching AppleCare One, a new $19.99 monthly subscription plan that includes coverage for up to three products. Customers can choose to add protection for more devices for $5.99 per month each.

Until now, people have had to enroll their Apple devices into separate AppleCare+ plans if they wanted additional coverage for their products beyond the standard warranty. Now, the company is offering bundled coverage.

AppleCare One includes all of the benefits of AppleCare+, including unlimited repairs for accidents like drops or spills, 24/7 support from Apple experts, and battery coverage. AppleCare One adds theft and loss protection beyond iPhone to also cover iPad and Apple Watch.

For the first time ever, Apple is letting customers add AppleCare coverage to the Apple products they already own. With the new subscription plan, customers can add most products up to four years old if they are in good condition. To verify that a device is in "good condition," it may be required to undergo a diagnostic check using a customer's iPhone or iPad, or at an Apple Store, before being added to the plan.

“AppleCare One pricing is the same regardless of the products that are covered, meaning a customer can enroll their iPhone, iPad, and Apple Watch, and save up to $11 a month over enrolling in separate AppleCare+ plans for each device,” Apple explained in a press release.

This means that if someone buys AppleCare One when they purchase a new MacBook Pro and add their iPhone to the plan, they will already be saving money by not having two separate AppleCare+ plans. Plus, they will get even more value if they include another device, like an Apple Watch.

Only devices in the customer’s Apple Account can be covered under AppleCare One, Apple says.

For users who just want protection for one device, Apple says that they can continue to sign up for AppleCare+. The tech giant also notes that the new Theft and Loss coverage for Apple Watch and iPad will not only be part of AppleCare One, but also be available as part of AppleCare+ for customers who want to cover a single iPad or Apple Watch.

AppleCare One is available starting Thursday in the United States. Consumers can sign up for AppleCare One directly on their iPhone, iPad, or Mac, or by visiting an Apple Store.

Starting Thursday, users who have an iPad Air (M2 and later), iPad Pro (M4), iPad mini (A17 Pro), and iPad (A16) can order repair kits and components, including displays, batteries, cameras, and external charging ports.

“At Apple, our goal is to create the world’s greatest products that last as long as possible,” said Brian Naumann, Apple’s vice president of AppleCare, in a press release. “With today’s announcement, we’re excited to expand our repair services to more customers, enabling them to further extend the life of their products — all without compromising safety, security, or privacy.”

Launched in 2022, Self Service Repair allows consumers to do their own repairs at home if they’re comfortable doing so by getting access to the same manuals used at Apple Store locations and Apple Authorized Service Providers.

Apple says the program now supports 65 Apple products, including the recently released iPhone 16e, MacBook Air, and Mac Studio. The company shared that Canada will soon become the 34th country where Apple offers Self Service Repair.

Apple also revealed more details about its Genuine Parts Distributor program, which allows independent mobile repair professionals to order genuine Apple service parts and components. These parts are available via authorized third-party distributors, such as MobileSentry in the U.S., plus MobileSentry and Mobileparts.shop in Europe. Genuine Parts Distributor offers many Apple parts for iPhone repairs, including displays, batteries, and charging ports, with iPad parts coming tomorrow.

The price of AppleCare+ coverage for iPhone Plus models has increased

Catherine Shu — 11:55 PM PDT · September 12, 2017

Heads up if you want to buy AppleCare+ for an iPhone Plus: you'll be paying more. The price of AppleCare+ for the iPhone 6s Plus and iPhone 7 Plus has increased to $149, which is also how much the plan will cost for the iPhone 8 Plus.

Previously, covering the two older Plus models cost $129, the same as iPhone 6s, iPhone 7 and iPhone 8. Owners of the latter three don't have to pay more because the price of their AppleCare plans will remain the same.

At $999, the iPhone X is Apple's most expensive smartphone so far and if you want AppleCare+ for it, you'll also be shelling out more money—$199 to be exact.

AppleCare+ extends coverage for iPhones to two years from its purchase date and up to two incidents of accidental damage coverage. The devices are sold with a limited warranty and 90 days of free support.

Pricing for other AppleCare+ plans, including the iPhone SE, iPads and Apple Watches, remains the same.
