iOS 26 beta 4 arrives,
with Liquid Glass tweaks
and AI news summaries

Apple on Tuesday released the fourth developer beta of its next big software update, iOS 26, which brings with it slight changes to its Liquid Glass redesign and the re-introduction of AI-powered notification summaries for news, among other updates.

The rollout of the fourth beta of the iOS 26 public beta, which is expected to launch later this week.

The developer betas are meant to give mobile app makers time to test their apps with Apple's new software so they're ready for the public launch of the new operating system in the next few months. Because of consumer demand for early releases, Apple for years has been offering public betas following its Worldwide Developers Conference in June. This allows iPhone owners to also get their hands on the updated software before its wider, global launch, but with fewer stability issues and bugs.

The latest developer beta (iOS 26 beta 4) largely reflects what users can expect in the coming public beta.

iOS 26 beta 4 introduces a new "Welcome" splash screen when you first update the software, plus introductory screens for various features, like Siri and its AI-powered notification summaries and prioritization options, as well as for iOS 26's revamped Camera app.

Earlier this year, Apple was forced to put its AI notification summaries on pause after complaints by the BBC, which said the feature had misrepresented one of its headlines. The AI-powered news summary claimed Luigi Mangione, the person charged with the murder of UnitedHealthcare CEO Brian Thompson, had died by suicide, which wasn't true. As a result, Apple said a software update would be released to clarify when the text shows an AI summarization.

The setup screen for this AI summarization feature, still in beta, includes a warning message under the "News & Entertainment" section. Here, Apple notes that "Summarization may change the meaning of the original headlines” and advises users to “Verify information.”

Other early adopters of the new beta also found that Apple is continuing to refine its user interface redesign known as Liquid Glass.

While beta 3 pulled back on some of the more transparent elements in some apps, beta 4 reverses things again. Testers have pointed to updates in apps like the App Store, Photos, Apple Music, Weather, and elsewhere, and noted that the Notification Center also adds a dynamic tint as you scroll.

Release notes for beta 4 had not been published on Apple's Developer website at the time of publication, so there is likely more to be spotted, especially in terms of minor bug fixes and performance improvements.

Alongside today's release, Apple also launched new versions of its other betas, including iPadOS 26 beta 4, macOS 26 beta 4, watchOS 26 beta 4, tvOS 26 beta 4, visionOS 26 beta 4, and Xcode 26 beta 4.

Romain Dillet — 10:54 AM PDT · July 18, 2016

Dear developers, today is update day. Apple just released the third beta for the next major iteration of iOS, macOS, tvOS and watchOS — that’s a lot of megabytes. The third developer betas squash bugs and tweak new features as the final versions of these operating system updates will be released in the fall.

So you might be wondering what’s new in iOS 10? iOS is receiving a massive update with a much more powerful Siri, a brand new Messages app and many, many little improvements. I already wrote a preview about what to expect.

As for macOS Sierra, Siri is the main star of the show. For the first time, you’ll be able to talk to your Mac using Siri. The Photos app is also getting an update, as well as Safari with a new picture-in-picture mode for videos. Again, I got my hands on the new operating system and wrote my first impressions.

watchOS 3 will be a major update as well with a redesigned user interface. Gone is the Friends screen when you press the side button. Instead, you can easily switch between multiple apps and watch faces. Also, apps launch much faster.

tvOS 10 isn't a dramatic update as the Apple TV is only getting a dark mode, a new single sign-on options for all your TV content apps. The Apple TV can also act as a HomeKit hub now.

WWDC 2025: Everything announced, including Liquid Glass, Apple Intelligence updates, and more

Lauren Forristal, Sarah Perez

WWDC 2025 kicked off Monday and as in previous years, the company focused on software updates and new technologies, including the next version of iOS, called iOS 26.

This year, there was considerable pressure on the company to build on its promises and to make amends to developers as it lags behind in AI and faces continued legal challenges over its App Store.

iOS 26 is the most dramatic design change in over a decade

When Apple introduced a major overhaul to iOS back in 2013 with the launch of iOS 7, it felt jarring for many users with the shift from the prior skeuomorphic design with gradients and real-world textures to the more colorful, but flat, design style that reflected Apple's then chief design officer Jony Ive's taste for minimalism.

At WWDC 2025, the company announced a refreshed user interface called Liquid Glass, which features shiny, reflective, and transparent visual interface elements that give the software a more “glassy” look and feel.

The Liquid Glass display is translucent and will behave like glass in the real world. The color of the screen is informed by your content and will adapt between light and dark environments. In addition, alerts appear from where you tap, context menus expand into a scannable list when you scroll and tap.

iOS 26, a new naming scheme

Instead of using system names like iOS 19 and macOS 19, Apple will now use the year as part of the name. This means all its operating systems will be called iOS 26, iPadOS 26, macOS 26, tvOS 26, watchOS 26, and visionOS 26.

A dedicated Games app

Apple unveiled a new dedicated gaming app that is designed to centralize gaming experiences on Apple devices. The app will serve as a launcher for games and allow users to track achievements and view leaderboards.

The Games app will also include social features, including a “Play Together” tab that lets you see what your friends are playing, compare scores, and invite them to play with you. There’s also “Challenges,” which is a new way to compete with friends in score-based showdowns.

MacOS, iPadOS, watchOS, visionOS, and tvOS updates

Apple showed off watchOS 26, the upcoming software overhaul for the Apple Watch. It will launch with a redesigned interface based on Apple’s new Liquid Glass operating system, a wrist-flick gesture, a new Apple Intelligence-powered Workout Buddy fitness feature, and more.

Apple TV is also getting a redesign, featuring a Liquid Glass aesthetic that offers a sleek and “unobtrusive” design, the company said. One of the standout features is the ability to quickly jump into a user profile. Apple TV will now present profile options each time it wakes from sleep, making it more convenient for each family member to select their profile and quickly resume watching their own favorite shows and movies. There’s also a karaoke feature.

macOS 26, which the company calls Tahoe, is getting some upgrades as well, in addition to the new Liquid Glass aesthetic will include an AI-powered Shortcuts app.

iPad OS will make the iPad feel like a Mac, including a new Preview feature that gives users a range of tools, including markup using Apple Pencil and AutoFill. Users can also export images in different formats.

And along with updates to visionOS, Apple’s Vision Pro AR/VR headset is getting a couple of new accessories: a Logitech Muse stylus and PlayStation’s VR2 Sense controller compatibility.

Updates to CarPlay and AirPods, too

While leaks suggested more gestures and other additions, Apple announced that the AirPods lineup would be getting two key features: studio-quality audio recording and camera remote. It’s also getting a camera remote.

Three of the biggest additions to CarPlay will be widgets and live activities, as well as the ability to choose a “tapback” response to incoming messages. Users will now also be able to pin their favorite conversations, just like in iMessage.

Apple Wallet, polls, Maps, and more

Other smaller features were announced as well, like new travel-friendly features for Apple Wallet; polls in iMessages; lyrics translation and pronunciation features; and Maps will learn your commute.

This story was originally published on June 5 and was updated significantly with all the announcements from WWDC 2025 on June 9.
