Klarna might reschedule its IPO for September

Klarna might look to IPO as early as September, sources told Bloomberg. The news comes as fintech stock prices surge and the U.S. IPO market strengthens.

Klarna filed for IPO back in March but paused such plans only a month later after President Trump's tariff announcements rattled the market. At the time, Klarna was looking to raise at least $1 billion and nab a $15 billion valuation. By June, however, Klarna's co-founder and CEO, Sebastian Siemiatkowski, took a different turn. When asked about the company's IPO plans, Siemiatkowski only
