

Artificial Intelligence News

As of mid-2023, an estimated 1 in 4 venture dollars in the U.S. this year has gone to a startup that incorporates artificial intelligence in its business. That's especially remarkable considering that a year earlier, it's safe to say, most people couldn't name an AI technology — never mind having spent much time using one.

Generative AI applications such as OpenAI's ChatGPT, Google's Bard or Microsoft's Bing started being widely adopted in late 2022, sparking sudden mainstream interest in the potential capabilities of AI to replace or augment humans in tasks from complex problem-solving to creative writing.

On this page, we track all things AI news — from artificial intelligence news articles, to AI business news, to the trends driving this transformative technology forward.

Frequently Asked Questions

— What is AI?

Artificial intelligence, or AI, refers to the simulation of human intelligence by computers and other machines. Increasingly, there are AI applications that can problem-solve, understand and mimic human language, identify patterns, learn and reason.

Advancements in AI technologies in recent years have seen artificial intelligence adopted in industries ranging from health care to investing to manufacturing to national security and defense, and frequently put AI in the news.

But while AI systems have proven themselves adept at specific tasks, these systems have not [yet] become what researchers refer to as artificial general intelligence, or AGI — a hypothetical type of AI as smart and capable as a human that learns from experience, incorporates context into its understanding of the world, and adapts to new situations with acquired knowledge.
