Methodology

The curated Emerging Unicorn Board includes private companies with known valuations of $500 million or more but less than $1 billion, based on Crunchbase data. The list is updated whenever a new company reaches that valuation range or there is a change in valuation for a company already on the leaderboard. Companies that are subsequently valued at more than $1 billion will be removed from the board and promoted to The Crunchbase Unicorn Board. Companies that exit will also be removed from the Emerging Unicorn Board.

We're working to make the Emerging Unicorn Board a comprehensive resource for you to gain deeper insights into the companies that are likely to be the next unicorn companies. If you notice we're missing companies and believe they should be added to this list, contact us at support@crunchbase.com.

Frequently Asked Questions

— What is an emerging unicorn?

An emerging unicorn is a high-growth startup that is on the brink of achieving unicorn status by reaching a valuation of $500 million or more but less than $1 billion in a private company financing. A few examples of current emerging unicorns that could become the next tech unicorns include Affinity, HackerRank, Brightline and Typeform. These potential future unicorns have found product market fit, have a scalable product or service, and have raised millions of dollars in venture capital.
