The Web3 Tracker is a one-stop shop for following Web3 trends, news and data about venture funding and leading investors in the sector.

Web3 refers to the next evolution of the internet primarily built on blockchain technology. While the concept has been around for just under a decade and didn't enter mainstream usage until a few years ago, the Web3 sector has attracted more than $100 billion in investment, Crunchbase data shows.

Web3: A brief history

Whereas Web 1.0 represents the early days of the internet and its static, heavy content-related nature, Web 2.0 was the maturation of that into a more user-generated network that brought about more utility, sharing and interactivity.

Web3 could be the most significant step yet. The term was coined by Ethereum co-founder Gavin Wood in 2014 and refers to moving the internet toward decentralized technologies with the promise of increased transparency and accessibility. Proponents say the shift toward Web3 will make the internet open to more innovative technologies and shift power away from large tech companies.
