Wisdom Ventures is raising a second fund to invest in wellness

By Michael Bodley

Published June 25, 2025

Wisdom Ventures has raised an initial $16 million of a $50 million target for a second fund, betting in part on tech startups working to curb technology addiction.

The firm's new fund comes as Silicon Valley and the world beyond grapple with the early impacts on users of the fast rise of AI and other emerging technologies. Numerous studies and reports indicate that average screen time is increasing and that heavy social media usage has exacerbated adolescent mental health issues.

“It’s mission-driven startups focused on integrating this whole piece around well-being, wellness,” partner Soren Gordhamer told PitchBook. “We feel like there’s a lot of innovation that’s going to be happening in these spaces. In the past, new technologies haven’t always helped our well-being.”

Ho Nam, managing director of Altos Ventures, expects a rise in M&A as giants like Meta carry out more deals. He personally invested in Wisdom Ventures as a bet on this, as well as for personal reasons.

“This is a thing that keeps popping up in my life,” Nam said. “It’s a huge issue, and there’s nobody that I know that doesn’t have a family member or a close friend who’s dealt with mental health issues.

“I’ve been surrounded by it, and I’m trying to help people out and do something about this problem.”

Other LPs include noted Silicon Valley entrepreneurs like LinkedIn founder Reid Hoffman and Pinterest founder Evan Sharp.

Not lost on the irony, Wisdom has also invested in OpenAI and its rival Anthropic — despite AI not being a stated focus when the firm opened its doors in 2022. And while it looks to profit from those investments, it’s also cognizant of AI’s dangers, Gordhamer said.

He also believes US regulation has a role to play in placing guardrails on AI. Anthropic has been “asking the right questions...and are trustworthy in terms of how they’re navigating this,” he added. “We’re all in a really unknown area.”

Wisdom Venture’s first fund, raised in 2022 and now fully deployed, backed Betterleave, which focuses on grief, Hume, which trains LLMs on processing human emotions, and Substack.

Wisdom Ventures invests in a range of wellness initiatives outside AI, too. The firm has done due diligence on or invested in startups combating alcohol addiction. It’s explored so-called “dumb phones.” And the firm has backed a range of startups pushing people to get outside and exercise, including to play pickleball.
