

TechCrunch All Stage 2025: Prepare 4 VC's Jason Kraus will instruct on how to turn chaos into momentum

Being a founder often feels like you're building the plane midflight. You're juggling fundraising, product-market fit, marketing strategy, hiring — while quietly wondering if you're even doing it right.

TechCrunch AllStage 2025, which is happening on July 15 at the SoWa Power Station in Boston, is built to answer those questions. Whether you're pitching VCs, recruiting a killer team, or trying to make sense of your startup's finances (and your own), All Stage offers actionable insights from people who've lived it. Expect main-stage conversations, deep-dive workshops, and tactical networking designed to help you scale with confidence.

One of the voices you'll want to hear from is Jason Kraus, founder of Prepare 4 VC and one of the most committed startup ecosystem builders out there.

And there's a fresh bonus for new attendees. If you sign up during our limited-time offer, you can get a Founder Pass for \$155 and an Investor Pass for just \$250. Both of those are more than 60% off their standard prices, so move fast! Plus, students can still attend for just $99.

Why is Kraus speaking at All Stage?

Because he's made a career out of helping founders break through.

Kraus launched his first company in college, and he's never looked back. Through Prepare 4 VC, he's worked with thousands of early-stage entrepreneurs across the globe, helping them sharpen their pitch, validate their market, and get investor-ready. He's also a partner at the EQx Fund and Equity Venture Partners, where he helps founders explore new, often overlooked funding pathways.

But Kraus' impact goes beyond capital strategy. He's the engine behind founder communities like Startup Grind Boston, Startup Weekend, and the Startup Oasis Network, and he built the Breakthrough Program, a 10-week journey that helps founders get past execution bottlenecks and build real traction.
